KAYCEL DISPOSABLE PILLOWCASES

Camp Directors! This wholly new type of a product can answer one of your key problems — keeping your camp healthy all summer long.

Kaycel Disposable Pillowcases help you check the spread of infections, summer colds and other health hazards. So inexpensive, you may simply throw them away after one use — or when soiled after days of hard wear. They are equally perfect for bunk, guest house or infirmary.

When you recommend this item to parents, they save good family linens from damage or loss; you save laundry bills, damage claims.

Kaycel Disposable Pillowcases are made of a revolutionary new fabric — strong yarns bonded to layers of cellulose. They have the look and feel of soft, yet strong, absorbent cloth.

Write today for the complete KAYCEL pillowcase story. FREE samples will be rushed to you. Just fill in the coupon below:

with Heavy Duty UniMac Equipment

■ The UniMac Twin 202 Washer-Rinse-Extractor Combination and the Unidryer 37 are solving laundry problems for camps everywhere. Economical UniMac equipment eliminates long-distance hauling of laundry and the expense and delays of commercial service.

■ UniMac's 12-minute wash-rinse-extraction cycle is the fastest of any equipment. Hi-speed 1725 RPM extraction conditions washables so they dry in only 15 minutes, almost wrinkle-free without ironing. Speed of operation reduces the supply of clothing and linens required by campers and makes camp schedules more flexible.

■ The UniMac Twin 202 and the Unidryer 37 are each capable of producing up to 150 lbs. dry weight washables per hour. Both are rugged, compact commercial equipment engineered for years of trouble-free operation without costly maintenance. Operation is simple. At many camps junior counselors do the laundry along with other duties.

More than ever we are impressed by the fact that we live in a dichotomous world. A recent sampling of newspaper headlines of 1961 showed truly amazing contradictions. "Spelling Bee Contestant Misses 'Distichous'" was one headline. "Gang Victim Gets Constant Guard" was another. Intelligent youth or juvenile delinquents?

"Soviet Spaceman Orbits Earth," we were told; but at the same time we read about "Last of Savage Tribes in South Pacific Losing Out to 20th Century". How can we explain this disparity? And is our new technology leading us in the right direction? All too frequently, 1961 headlines said "Fall-Out Heavier".

Certainly man has not yet learned to live at peace on his planet. Nations war against each other, and it would seem that our own nation is fighting against itself. A headline which read "U.S.-Cuba Relations Stormy" was overshadowed by one which screamed "Alabama Declares Martial Law".

Could it be that our children are frightened and bewildered? Of course, they must be.

How much of the outside world should be brought into camp? How great a part must camping play in the new search for national purpose?

The National Camp Directors Guide does not pretend to be a policy making publication, but it is a magazine which is read by policy makers, camp owners and directors. As such, we feel that we have a responsibility to air the following point of view:

1. Insulation at camp is no longer possible. The time has come when to do nothing about world problems is equal to committing a crime against humanity.

2. Of foremost importance, before and even as a means to solving world problems, is the need for this country to strengthen her own ideals of peace and democracy, to rid herself of ambiguities. Camps, dealing with over five million children in cooperative-living ventures, must be in the front line of such a program.

Therefore, we urge you not to shield your campers from reality, but to let the world enter your camp in the form of public affairs discussions, current events nights, etc. Problems wisely discussed and assigned their proper values can do much toward alleviating fear and promoting positive directions.

We urge you also, through your daily camping situations, and at every possible opportunity, to imbue each camper with the awareness that peace, rather than being taken for granted, must be actively achieved.

Let us develop the resources of our land,
call forth its powers,
build up its institutions,
promote all its great interests, and see whether we also, in our day and generation, may not perform something worthy to be remembered.

THE FALLOUT SHELTER AT CAMP

A 12 Point Preparedness Program

by CONGRESSMAN VICTOR L. ANFUSO

Ranking member: House Science and Astronautics Committee

A MAN LIES IN BED at night, and he worries about the enormity of the problem. It might happen. Some aggressor nation could launch a nuclear attack against the U.S., anywhere or everywhere. Is his family protected? Can he face a future so grim?

Suppose he had a family as large as your summer family . . . your campers and your staff. Then he would have a tremendously amplified problem, and a huge responsibility. Camp defense, like civil defense, takes planning. Right now!

Keep in mind the fact that somber parents may choose your camp, at least in part, as a rural haven away from the dangerous target potential of the urban areas. Consciously or not, they know that your camp removes their child from the immediate agony that bombs portend. They remember, too well, that most wars have started in the summer.

CIVIL DEFENSE

In considering a camp preparedness program, we should first take a clear look at some of the criticism of our national civil preparedness program. It has been called futile. People say that a nuclear war will mean nothing less than total destruction. Are they right? According to findings of the Special Subcommittee on Radiation of the U.S. Congress Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, any nuclear attack on the United States is more likely to be a limited than an all-out attack. Millions would escape the first fatal effects of blast, heat radiation, and nuclear radiation.

How about the charges that our civil defense program is unrealistic? Claims have been made that the public is being misinformed, the extent of the disaster minimized. A certain amount of "easy assurance" propaganda is being peddled by unscrupulous salespeople who deal in shelters, survival kits and the like . . . which is to be deplored. But not every shelter will be in a prime target area. There can be no positive prediction as to which areas of the United States would be attacked should a nuclear war occur. More than likely your camp, if it is at least 60 miles away from a large population center, will not be too close to "ground zero".

WARMONGERING?

It has been said that the mere act of discussing a survival program means condoning war, even provoking it. Such a statement was made recently in the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists. But consider this: However much we want peace and are willing to work for it, we cannot make policies for other nations. Would the simple expedient of ignoring the existence of nuclear weapons be a reasonable way to prevent their use? There are some people who believe that an adequate preparedness program would deter another nation from using nuclear weapons.

To quote from an editorial in the Saturday Review of November 5, 1961: "The issue is not whether the American people should or should not protect themselves against possible disaster. Of course they should. The issue is whether the American people are entitled to full, honest information about the nature of the anticipated disaster and the problems involved in adequate protection."

We come then to the first point in our twelve point preparedness program for your camp:

1. Contact your local civil defense office.

Tell them about your situation, how many people there are under your care. Describe the physical set-up of your camp. Ask them for advice on building shelters and providing emergency food supplies. Obtain and read all of their publications. Determine how much help might be expected to come from the government in case of emergency, and how much you will have to go it alone. The proposed Federal Shelter Incentive Program provides a Federal grant of something less than actual cost for certain shelter spaces meeting approved standards, created in public or private non-profit institutions, engaged in health, education, or welfare activities.

2. Plan, on paper, your emergency procedures.

You may find it advisable to make three schedules: one for the attack alert, one for the immediate disaster, and one for the long term survival phase of your program. In any case your written plans should include: A) a map of your property, indicating the location of shelter, food, water, hospital, generators, fuel supply, communications equipment, fire fighting tools, medical supplies, gas masks, etc. B) a detailed description of your warning system and the location of your shelter. Copies of this paper should be posted in every main building. C) a food rationing and a water rationing program. D) a list indicating the chain of command in the event of your disability. (Your full program should be discussed with these people in advance.)

3. Include in your records a complete physical and familial history of each person on the premises.

If a camper needs remedial glasses or medication, detailed prescriptions should be provided by the child's doctor. These may be essential for the child's well-being if the original records and/or physicians are destroyed. It is, of course, problematic whether there would be any way to obtain such help even long after a nuclear disaster.

In case of complete catastrophe at a camper's home, your records should include the names and addresses of relatives (or friends) in geographically different parts of the country, or in another country.

4. Provide for shelter.

Forty-eight hours after a 10 megaton bomb has been exploded at ground level, an area 150 miles downwind, and extending outward 25 miles, may be contaminated by nuclear radiation, although at this distance the fallout may not start until four hours after the blast. In those two days, half of those without proper fallout shelter may have received a fatal radiation dose. Those in shelters or buildings that shield out some of the rays, might escape with only a siege of radiation sickness. The Architectural Forum advises that almost any material may be used for shielding, but that those with low cost and high density (most pounds per cubic foot) are best. Three inches of lead gives the same protection as two feet of concrete or five feet of water. Density and thickness rather than strength are the criteria where fallout alone is concerned. A protection factor (the rate of protection within the shelter as opposed to the protection in an exposed location) of 1000 or better will give virtual immunity. A factor of 100 is the minimum factor of any real value. Because the intensity of radiation falls off quickly, a small shelter with a high protection factor might be placed within a larger area giving less protection. The larger shelter, with better living conditions, could be used after the early, critical period.

When the cumulative radiation dose (roentgens per hour) received over the whole body in four days or less is over 600, few people will survive; 300-600: severe sickness and many deaths; 200-300: sickness and some deaths; 100-200: some sickness; 0-100: no obvious effects. It is even more important to protect young people from radiation than adults, because they are the ones who will produce the next generation which may be affected by radiation-induced mutations.

Information may be obtained from civil defense offices about the type of shelter to build and whether existing buildings can be converted. You must also take into consideration the basic needs which must be supplied within the shelter.

5. Provide for emergency food supply and storage.

A two-week supply of non-perishable food must be stored for each proposed occupant of a shelter. Cost: about $1 a day per person. Storage space: about 2 cubic feet per person, less if concentrated foods are used. Food which is not subject to contact with radioactive material or spoilage will be perfectly good. As much food as possible should be served warm.

Civil defense has proposed that government-held stores of excess farm produce be relocated in convenient, protected locations for distribution in the event of an emergency, but such a plan is not yet in operation.

6. Provide for emergency water supply.

At least three and one half gallons of potable water should be available for each occupant of the shelter. Provided that radioactive material does not actually come in contact with it, the water will remain potable. A storage tank containing pre-fallout water which is used as a source must be able to be cut off from an outside, unprotected supply. Additional water should be supplied for each person for hygienic purposes. Contaminated water which has been in contact with radioactive dust can be purified by special treatment and sedimentation and may also be suitable for washing and sanitation purposes in an emergency.

7. Provide for medical needs.

Fire may be a big hazard. It will be necessary to have a larger than nor-

ENZYMATIC ACTIVATOR

This King-Of-All bacterial regenerator quickly restores the natural digestive process for which your septic tank or cesspool was designed. Unlike pumping or chemical treatments, the digestive activity of Enzymatic continues through the drain-tile and gravel field; does complete job. Very easy to use, it's an inexpensive yearly treatment. Non-toxic. GUARANTEED.

COMMERCIAL DRAIN KLEENER

Formulated to answer the need for a heavy duty cleaner to immediately open clogged or sluggish drains or grease traps in commercial establishments and camps, it instantly dissolves greases, hair and lint.

"King-Of-All" is inexpensive and easy to use. Follow the directions weekly for trouble free operation of your entire sewage system.

SEPTIC TANK KLEENER

When a septic tank has not been used regularly or when large amounts of chemicals, detergents, soaps etc. have been introduced, it may require this heavy duty caustic Kleener. One treatment of Septic Tank Kleener should be followed by a container of Enzymatic Activator to restore the natural bacterial function.

mal supply of ointments and dressings for burns.

Poor sanitation conditions may make epidemics of infectious diseases a real danger. You must be able to provide isolation wards and be familiar with isolation techniques. Roads may be impassable, and city hospitals destroyed.

A person who is suffering from radiation sickness will have the following symptoms: gastro-intestinal disorders, nausea, vomiting, fever, physical lassitude, lowered white blood count, increased susceptibility to infection.

8. Build firebreaks around your camp. Provide fire-fighting equipment.

The original fireball of a 10 megaton bomb, an intensely hot and luminous mass, would be more than three miles in diameter. Fires ignited by the bomb's visible light or infra-red radiation, and from the secondary effects of such things as short circuited wires, could set fields and forests ablaze. These fires may rage out of control until quenched by rains. Many cities plan to use their wide boulevards as natural firebreaks. It is important to clear a wide area around your property and to place boxes containing shovels and other fire-fighting equipment at frequent intervals along the border.

9. Delegate authority.

The question of chain of command has already been determined in your emergency plan. The next step is to assign the members of your staff (and possibly the older campers) to specific posts which they will attend in the event of a disaster. Who will take charge of the younger campers? Who will be in charge of the fire brigade? Will the kitchen staff be prepared to implement the food rationing program? Who will tend the sick? bury the dead? Advance planning of this sort can avoid panic and will be a vital factor in saving more lives.

10. Obtain and train your staff in the use of special emergency equipment.

Emergency equipment can be anything from an emergency generator to first aid supplies. If feasible, older campers may also be involved in this part of your program.

It is advisable to have battery power and an emergency generation system with enough fuel to last for at least two weeks. Two units operating on a priority basis will give an added degree of reliability. You should have communications gear: battery operated radios, a walky-talky system. Radiation detection instruments are important, both ratemeters to show the intensity of radiation and dosimeters to show the total amount of radiation to which an area has been exposed.

Someone must be well enough informed about all these things, not only to use them, but to ascertain if they need repair or calibration.

11. Hold warning and emergency station drills.

Until now it has not been necessary to involve the campers in your preparedness program (unless you have elected to include the older campers in points 8 and 9).

Drills must be held until the procedure is familiar to everyone, even the youngest. It is absolutely essential that every child knows where to go and what to do. The many lives saved in the event of a disaster will be well worth this little amount of time taken from your regular camp program. The same policy is used in fire drills and boat drills in school and at sea.

During emergency drills, campers may also be instructed in the use of gas masks, when they become available, and protective clothing (to be used in case of chemical warfare), and in the decontamination procedures which will be necessary in the shelter.

12. Intensify your program of primitive, outdoor living techniques.

How far does your outdoor program go? A child's existence may depend upon his skill and knowledge in fending for himself. If there is inhabitable country left, will your campers be prepared with the right kind of training? It may be that only the children who are so equipped today will inherit tomorrow's havoc.

There is no longer time to play at building lean-to's. It is time to learn to build mud houses.

Most of all, it is time to work actively for peace so that American boys and girls will never have to face this Apocalyptic nightmare.

CAN AN OUTSIDER REPLACE YOU

by M. OTTO BERG
Specialist in Camp Real Estate

COULD YOUR CAMP get along without you? We have always heard that no man is indispensable, that he can somehow be replaced. When it comes to camp ownership, however, we must think more carefully about this glib generality.

Camping is such an individual and thoroughly personalized business. Camps are entrusted with the most precious possession of parents: their child. To give parents security and confidence about the welfare of their absent children is no slight task. You, the camp directors, represent the foundation of this trust. It is not easily transferred. Certainly, buildings and equipment cannot supply it.

Most camp directors are careful to insure both themselves and their camps against fire, natural phenomena, accidents at camp, etc. Wills are made out in case of death. But suppose that it becomes necessary for you to sell your camp to an outsider? For many intrinsic reasons, you will want your camp to continue to exist. This continuity, too, is a matter of insurance—the insurance of sound planning. Negotiations ultimately deal not only with financial matters, but also with that very real though intangible thing: good will.

BUYERS

Qualified buyers are hard to find. It is necessary that the purchaser be particularly suited as to personality, administrative ability, and financial stability (or at least the ability to secure financing). Screening is important. For this reason, the decision to sell on the part of a camp owner should not be a sudden one.

CAN AN OUTSIDER REPLACE YOU?

In order to accomplish the transfer of a camp with the least loss of business, the prospective buyer must have the ability to enroll campers. Before he takes over a camp, he should work entirely on his own contacts and represent himself as an associate of the camp. Do not neglect this initial phase. It is imperative that the purchaser have his own group from which he can develop his following and augment the old clientele, for in addition to the natural attrition of campers each year for various reasons, there will inevitably be the loss of at least several children because of the transfer.

You may decide that a member of your staff who has been with the camp for years and is thoroughly acquainted with the children and parents would make a good prospective buyer. This may be so, but it is not necessarily true. A person can be an excellent worker and do a fine job of programming, handling personnel and greeting parents, yet not have the ability to go into a home and complete the enrollment. It is evidently risky for him to purchase a camp.

I remember one owner, during the thirties, who decided to test his staff in the matter of securing children. They were asked, at a meeting in the city, to go out and individually solicit children for the coming season. When the camp season began, the staff had enrolled the grand total of four children!

TRANSFER GRADUALLY

Apparently the best procedure in actually transferring the camp to the new owner is by infiltration. That is, the seller will operate the camp (including contacting the clientele and selecting the staff) in the first year exactly as he has done in the past, and the purchaser will be carried as an associate director. During this time, the purchaser will have a chance to meet all the staff and determine which ones he wants to keep. He will know all the children and meet most of their parents.

At the closing banquet the owner can make his exit speech and introduce the new owner who will carry on the traditions of the camp. This method is the most painless, and the clientele cannot complain that they have been deceived. From then on, it is the job of the purchaser to keep the camp going, although in some cases the retiring owner stays on another year (and sometimes even longer).

Have you found a potential buyer, one who is willing and able to carry out the above plan? Good. Now, consider these further steps.

PRICE YOUR CAMP

First, take stock of your assets, the value of your land and buildings and equipment. This can be determined from your insurance appraisal, based on replacement in today's market. If the buyer has merely to pay for replacement costs, however, he might as well build a new camp. We must add to the purchase price the value of good will. This is certainly a difficult thing to assess, being often simply a result of the talent of the owner. If the camp now returns higher earnings than normal for the amount of invested capital, how much of this added income can be expected to continue under new ownership? The courts have upheld that good will is a valuable factor only if it belongs to the business. Again we must stress the need for effectively carrying out our foregoing plan. Good will can be determined if there is some idea of the number of campers the new owner will inherit. An analysis of camps which have been sold in the past ten years shows that, on an average, this additional factor has amounted to about one and one half times the gross yearly income.

TAXES

Of course, you will want to use the capital gains provisions to your best advantage. In this specialized field, it would be advisable for any camp owner to get advice from his accountant. We have found that a purchaser will go along with the seller on any plan that will work to his tax benefit, as long as the purchaser is not penalized. For instance, if the seller accepts no more than one third of the total purchase price in cash, then it is considered an installment contract and the tax is only paid on the amount received. If it is over one third, the tax must be paid on the entire amount. Sometimes a purchaser will buy the stock of a corporation, liquidate the old corporation, transferring the assets to himself and setting up capitalization, and then transfer it all to a new corporation. This is a long way around, but it has its good points in the saving of taxes.

In summary: 1) Plan ahead. 2) Locate a qualified buyer. 3) Be assured of a continuing clientele. 4) Introduce the new owner gradually. 5) Take stock of your assets. 6) Determine the amount of good will. 7) Arrange the sale of your camp so that it is most convenient for your tax set-up.

Then, and only then, will you have ensured the long-range continuance of your camp.

Time to Paint . . . by JAMES DONATHAN

SPRING IS THE TIME to make a close inspection of your buildings and grounds. Will your camp present a harmonious picture to the children and parents who see it for the first time? Does everything look fresh and new and clean? Are those extra touches, your signs and markers, as attractive as they could be?

How about the docks and the boats? Your outdoor sports equipment? Stairs? Masonry? Retaining walls? Screens? Are all your structures well protected from the ravaging effects of weather? If you put off the job for another year, are you apt to run into costly repairs?

Spring is the time to paint.

WEATHER CONDITIONS

Allow yourself ample time to get the job done. Nature will have a lot to say about your schedule.

It is best to paint when the temperature is between 40 and 80 degrees. Painting should be done during a period of low humidity, so that the paint will dry properly. And you will have to wait in the morning until the sun has dried the dew from the surfaces on which you intend to work. Painting in direct sun is not advisable because the paint will dry too fast and will crack. Make sure that you follow the shade around each project.

PREPARATION

Painting involves more than merely applying a loaded brush to a surface. Perhaps the biggest part of your job, and the one involving the most time, will be preparing and repairing those surfaces which are to be done. In the simplest cases, preparation will involve the removal of grime, grease and soot. A wire brush or a good wash-down with a detergent will ensure the adhesion of the paint applied.

TIME TO PAINT

Foundations and supports may have to be repaired, however, as will stairways and porches where dampness has caused the wood to rot. (Look for and remedy improper drainage which may be causing a faster deterioration than is usual around the bases of some of your structures.) Check for termites, and treat the areas which need this kind of protection before painting.

Make sure that rust is removed from all metal surfaces. With copper, which will not rust, watch for stains on the adjoining surfaces which may be caused by corrosion wash.

New surfaces, of course, will have to be sanded until they are smooth, but so will old surfaces which have cracked and peeled (perhaps because you have waited too long?) Cracks must be filled and knots sealed. Loosened putty should be removed and replaced.

Careful inspection will reveal danger spots which can be attacked at once, before they have time to develop into major-expense causing trouble.

EQUIPMENT

You may contract to have all your painting done by skilled painters, in which case they will have the necessary tools. But if you are willing and able to do the job yourself, or with the assistance of your maintenance staff, or even if you are just going to do those little touch-up jobs that always seem in need of doing, you will find that having the right equipment and taking care of it will mean a great saving in time and money. Check your tool shed to see whether you have the following accessories on hand:

- 4 to 5 inch brushes for flat surfaces.
- smaller brushes for trim, window frames and sashes.

- dusting brush
- wire brush
- masonry brush
- scrapers
- steel wool
- sandpaper
- spray gun
- rollers and pans
- stirring paddles
- strainers for removing lumps
- crack filler
- knot sealer
- putty knife
- caulking gun
- masking tape
- rags
- ladders
- rope
- solvent
- drop cloths
- clean cans

Different surfaces, of course, require different types of paints and primers. The National Paint, Varnish & Lacquer Association, Washington 5, D. C., has

TIPS FOR PAINTING

▶ When painting stairs which will be in use before they have a chance to dry, paint every other step on the first day, and the remaining steps the next day.

▶ To keep screens from clogging, jog them while the paint or varnish is still wet.

▶ House paint is formulated to chalk gradually. If used on outdoor furniture, it will rub off on clothes.

TIME TO PAINT

- ▶ Do sashes, trim and doors first, so that you won't have to rest your ladder against newly painted walls.
- ▶ For fence posts there are special products which retard the rotting of wood which must be placed below the ground.
- ▶ After using and cleaning a brush, comb its bristles, wrap it in heavy paper containing moth flakes, and store it flat.
- ▶ In order to tell whether a building needs painting, check the window sills and other ledges. These will be the first surfaces to show the effects of weathering.
- ▶ Painting early, when you need do little more than dust and recoat, is the wisest economy.

HELP YOUR "SLOW" CAMPER

by BURTON P. RAPHAEL, M.A.
Greenwich Association for Retarded Children

IT IS THE BEGINNING of your camp season, and you become aware of particularly derisive noises emitting from one group of ten year olds: "Nyah, nyah, nyahh!" they chant,

"Johnny is a baby!"

Or suddenly his counselor will come to you to report "The other children won't accept Johnny. He can't seem to adjust. Johnny is a problem."

HELP YOUR "SLOW" CAMPER

There are bound to be problem children at your camp. Undoubtedly you have been confronted with similar situations before, where your skills as psychologist-humanitarian-"uncle" are sorely needed. Most frequently these cases involve otherwise normal but emotionally disturbed children. Don't be too quick to peg Johnny as a "mixed-up" child, however. Stop to consider: he may be a mental retardate.

But you say that you would have recognized it right away? Not necessarily. Let's look at the different types of retardates as they are generally classified.

WHAT IS A RETARDATE?

The unfortunate "vegetable" types, always institutionalized, need not concern us. Next lowest in the scale are "trainables", with I.Q.'s of under 50. Unless you specifically work with retardates, you are not apt to meet these children, nor are you likely to be involved with "educables" who have a general I.Q. range of 50-75. The "trainable" child needs constant guidance. He has no potential for independence and will always need to be supervised, in the home or in institutions.

Among the "educables", the greater proportion do have some potential for independence, but will need a great deal of guidance and training in achieving this end. "Educable" children can frequently be dealt with in our public schools, where they are placed in separate, ungraded classes.

Johnny may fall within the next group of retardates, the "dull-normal", with an I.Q. range of 75-90. Such a child may be found in the regular grades in school. Depending upon the awareness of the educators involved, special adjustments will be made for him. He will need extra guidance and is followed closely by supervisory personnel.

You may have met Johnny before the camp season started and noticed nothing wrong. Let me impress upon you this fact: Retarded children are more like than unlike normal children. Johnny's parents will not necessarily have told you about their son's problem, since many parents are loathe to admit the fact that their child is in any way different. Conversation may elicit the opinion that Johnny has had poor teachers, or that he was sickly as a child, or that poor eyesight has affected him somewhat. And Johnny's parents may be right. Doctors wish that they had a sure method of distinguishing such children as opposed to the true retardate. But Johnny may be, as we have already said, a "dull-normal" child who has come to spend the summer season at your camp. By all means, keep him there and work with him.

The rewards of working with these children can be gratifying and well worth the extra attention required, for the retarded child, while more like than unlike the normal child, when handled properly is apt to blossom forth more dramatically. Your camp may be just what this child needs. He will not gain in intelligence, of course, but he may make tremendous strides in his ability to make social adjustments and to function independently in society.

ENROLLMENT

Let's return for a minute to the enrollment stage. While his parents may not wish to talk about Johnny's problem, and while they may resent the fact of being asked directly, you could include certain items in your application questionnaire which would make it a little easier to determine the cause of his lack of adjustment later on.

NATIONAL CAMP DIRECTORS GUIDE

You might word it this way:
Q. How do you think that we can best help your child during his camping experience? 1. Social relations, with children _____? with adults _____? 2. Academically _____? 3. Recreation _____? 4. Personal Habits, grooming _____? cleanliness _____? others _____? 5. Manners _____? 6 Skills _____? 7. Coordination _____? 8. Other ways _____?

Q. If you have checked the last item, what do you think we should know that is not covered in this application?

HOW IS JOHNNY DIFFERENT?

When you have decided to work with Johnny, what will you notice about him? The fact that he is made the butt of the other children's jokes will indicate to you, even before you converse with him, that his reactions are not commensurate with his chronological age. His responses will show a lack of maturity in many cases.

Learning is difficult for him. He does not grasp things as quickly as the other children in his group. You may find that he has a lesser ability in the ordinarily accepted skills, such as making his bed in a neat manner. (On the other hand, he may have very important and desirable strengths which need to be uncovered and developed.)

His interests may be on a different level. Aware of his previous failures, he may lag and not get into the swing of things right away, not willing to risk failure again. He will probably have a low attention span for things requiring concentration. He will be less self-reliant than the others, more in need of discipline and standards.

PROBLEM CHILD?

Is he actually the "problem child" that his counselor says he is? Perhaps. As with a normal child, this is a matter of personality, related to many things aside from intelligence. Johnny, however, is very apt to have a combined social and intelligence problem because in all of his life he has lacked the feelings of success and achievement in trying to keep up with his peers.

What an opportunity this represents! Johnny may excel in physical skills, or be particularly adept at singing, or dramatics. Camp places so little emphasis on the academic side of life and so much on the outdoor activity program. Perhaps here, if no place else, this child will be able to feel success for the first time. As we mentioned before, his progress, unlike that of the normal child with an abnormal behavior problem, can be immediate and gratifying if he is handled in the right way.

HANDLE WITH CARE

A lot depends upon wise counseling. Johnny's bunk mates (or tent mates) must be helped to accept him. Of course each special situation may require a slightly different approach, according to the psychological make-up of the rest of the group. In general, however, a good counselor, through careful handling, will be able to lead the children toward a desire to take Johnny "under their wings" and to attempt to help him rather than to laugh at him. The problem of retardation need not and should not be revealed. Rather, the approach can be that not everyone can do everything well, that most people have weaknesses as well as strengths, and that sometimes their strengths need to be found.

It is important to mention, in passing, a possible point of danger. Johnny in himself does not present a safety problem. Whereas a "trainable" or even an "educable" child could get himself into a dangerous situation and not recognize the consequences of his own acts, children of Johnny's intelligence level are fully aware of physical danger. In his desire to gain favor and to be accepted, however, Johnny can be led into situations which he would not normally consider. Keep an eye out not only for Johnny, but for the real safety threat: the bright child with a fertile imagination who will think of dares which Johnny might accept.

YOUR STAFF CAN HELP

It might be wise to discuss Johnny and his particular problem in a staff meeting, or at least with those counselors most directly concerned with each phase of his activities. Again the word "retardate" need not be used, but it should be explained that Johnny will need special guidance and assistance in some of his endeavors.

His group need not be slowed down by Johnny's slower learning pace. When a new game is explained, for instance, care can be taken to see that Johnny is the child chosen for a sample run-off, thereby affording him a more pointed experience than he might get if he were merely to listen to instructions. Once he understands and is accepted, he will frequently excel in sports.

Individual activities such as swimming and crafts are normally geared to different ability levels, and thus will afford little or no problem.

Opportunities can usually be found in the daily schedule for private sessions and practice if Johnny needs this kind of help, and if it does not isolate him from his group. If he is adequate physically, Johnny should at all times be kept within his chronological age group, even if he prefers to associate with younger children where he is more readily accepted. An exception would be if a natural situation were to arise where he would be given a chance to show leadership.

Johnny needs praise and recognition even more than normal children. If he can earn these within his own group, he will be happy to stay with them.

NO SPECIAL PRIVILEGES

Modifications may be made for Johnny if your program is an elective one. Through guidance he can be led to choose those activities which will be best for him. At no time, however, should your camp's standards of discipline be lowered to accommodate his slower pace. The retarded child needs limits. If Johnny tends not to finish an activity because his attention has wandered, it would be best to make some adjustment in the level of his participation (e.g. simpler materials in crafts, special duties on the playing field, etc.) rather than to allow him to quit.

THE REAL REWARD

You can help Johnny. It will be a challenge, but well worth the trouble. A first, successful year at camp can make a vast difference in Johnny's life and in the lives of the people with whom he must associate as an active member of society. You may gain a steady, willing camper. And most important of all, you can make Johnny happy!

WE TAKE PRIDE in presenting a new feature.

Many camp directors have introduced interesting and ingenious activities into their program schedules which they would like to share with other camps for the benefit of camping in general. The best of the ideas submitted to us in the coming year (and their origins) will be the subjects of our next column. Do you have a pet project worth crowing about?

Among your older campers, you can start a satellite tracking team. This will involve daytime activity, too, if one of the projects (and an exciting one!) is making the telescope.

There are two types of telescopes, reflector and refractor. The refractor is somewhat easier to handle. A good 6" scope has power to view 12th magnitude stars. It is about 4 ft. long and is mounted on a stand, the heavier the better. Over-all weight will be 50 to 150 lbs. Assembled at camp, the 6" scope will cost about $150. The price range if you buy it is $200 to $500. For the purposes of satellite tracking it is also possible to use a 3" scope which can be assembled for $50.

Buy a low-powered eyepiece for any size scope. Better light is gained compared with a high-power piece. Check Army surplus stores for bargains.

You might obtain current books and magazines on the subject, to be kept in one of the tents or bunks ("club headquarters") and circulated among the members of the team. Discussion meetings and an occasional "late night" privilege for actual tracking will round out the program.

Contact one of the more than 100 Amateur Astronomers Associations, or the Astronomical League, Pittsburgh, for further information.

Younger campers can take to the air with kite flying, a vigorous sport and one in which great skills can be developed. Here again, half the fun is in the do-it-yourself part of the program. For this happy and inexpensive adjunct to your Arts & Crafts schedule, your local library will be able to recommend the more outstanding instructional books, or you can leave it to your Crafts counselor to tell you what supplies you will need.

If your camp is in short sessions, making the kites will be enough. For full season camps, however, the program can be enlarged to include kite flying instruction and practice, and kite flying contests. Perhaps you will want to include the construction of kites as part of your color war, or else as full season, cooperative bunk projects. In any case, if there is competition, do not neglect to award several prizes for the prettiest kite, the funniest kite, the most original kite, etc.

Keep in mind: There will probably be almost as many yo-yo's as campers at camp this year!

Wondering what to do with some of those cull logs? (see: "Money from the Woodland".) Add some scrap lumber, a few empty metal drums and the eager activity of a group of boys just about Huck Finn size, and you may (or may not, depending upon the amount of ingenuity and the number of thumbs involved) end up with a good looking raft.

You will probably need a small out-board motor for power. This can be hung from a well at the stern. One or two metal sweeps, bolted to the deck, will provide maneuverability. A continuous railing, about thirty inches high, is a good safety feature. You can spread a tarp, tent roof fashion, in the center of the raft for protection from the sun. Hang some life preservers around the edges . . . and what you do with it from there on is only limited by your imagination.

NCDG welcomes your program suggestions.

by DEREN S. GETZ

Camp Research Bureau

“FORESTS are for hiking.” “Forests are what you get lost in.” “Forests are where it is very dark and there are snakes.”

Typical and enlightening as these definitions by campers are, they miss two big points. If your camp property includes woodland, your forest is 1) an obligation, and 2) a source of income.

A tremendous job faces several million Americans who up to now have not been interested in making and keeping their timberland productive. There has been a long-time downward trend in the nation's forest acreage, and it is likely to continue. Those forests which are in comparatively small tracts, owned by farmers, business men, housewives, camp owners and others not associated with any forest industry, will be called upon to supply the ever increasing demand for raw materials for industry. There is a dual need for America's forests: sound management and a concerted effort to increase their numbers.

A great majority of camps, located in undeveloped or rural areas of the country, include wooded areas which are used and maintained merely for recreational purposes. Here is a chance to do something constructive about the lumber shortage, augment your camp program with an active demonstration of conservation techniques, reduce your yearly expenditure for building materials, and find an added income.

With the aid of information gleaned from the various instructional pamphlets provided by the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture, let's examine the facets of small forest management as they pertain to the camp owner, both private and organizational.

Q. What is a small forest?

A. Although the term "small forest" applies to all tracts under 5,000 acres, only a few come anywhere near that size. The average is 60 acres. Seventy percent of the farm forests are smaller than 50 acres. Many tiny holdings which could not be worked profitably by themselves, are farmed in cooperative ventures.

Q. How does the camp owner, whose property includes woodland, start "ahead of the game"?

A. Several of the costs involved in producing a timber crop are already included in the costs of running a camp. There need be no extra expenditure for the purchase of land, for administrative costs such as taxes and insurance. Protection from property trespass has already been considered.

Gross fire hazards have probably already been taken care of.

Q. How does your camp's woodland look now, as compared to the way it should look?

A. Of course, well-kept small forests in Georgia look different from those in Oregon or Minnesota. But in many ways they are alike. In each the trees are suited to the soil, climate and locality, and will give a good saleable crop. Poor or surplus trees have been thinned out to give the good ones room. Such a forest has no overripe trees, past their best growing years. It has no diseased or damaged trees, no very branchy or badly shaped trees.

The forest floor is covered with needles, twigs, and small branches. This covering permits the soil to absorb the large amounts of water that trees need, and prevents erosion. Beneath the litter a moist, fertile layer of humus covers the subsoil.

Generally speaking, there are around 1,000 trees growing per acre.

If the foregoing is a good description of your woodland, you can stop reading here. But if you, like many owners, are starting with overcut, run-down or sick woodlands, let's find out what can be done.

Q. What kind of assistance is available?

A. Finding out what is the matter, and then obtaining a prescription for the proper treatment, are the first steps to take. Congress has set aside money to help the states provide the owners of small forests with advice on forest management. Now an owner, whether or not he is a farmer, can obtain professional advice and technical assistance by consulting with his Soil Conservation District Supervisor, by writing or phoning his State Forester at the State Capital, or by contacting the State Extension Forester at a State Agricultural College. His county agricultural agent will also know where to secure help, as will any officer of the Forest Service or Soil Conservation Service who may be nearby.

The local forester will visit the owner's woodland and give on-the-spot advice. Generally this advice will be free, but the forester expects the owner to follow his suggestions. In a sense, this is the owner's way of carrying his share of the responsibility.

Assistance is offered in plans for management, marking trees in need of cutting, measuring these trees and estimating their volume, determining the proper cutting and logging methods to use in the harvesting operation, and marketing the finished products. In addition, many owners are advised on planting, thinning and pruning operations, as well as on the protection of

Q. What will the operational costs be?

depending upon the conditions of the timber stand, the kind of material needing removal, and the local market for such material. (If no use can be made of unwanted, small trees, a good way is to lop off their tops. They will live on, shade the ground, and force the better trees to grow tall and straight.)

Unstocked or poorly stocked areas may need tree planting. In many instances, seedlings are available through soil conservation districts. State nurseries sell seedlings at cost or less. Orders should be sent in 6 months in advance. County agents and local foresters usually have order blanks. One should try to get seedlings raised from seed that grew within 100 miles distance and 1,000 feet of altitude of the proposed planting site.

Because of the many different situations (locality, condition of planting site, types of trees planted), planting costs may vary from $10 to $100 per acre.

Also included in operational costs are those costs related to protecting and marketing the timber. We shall consider them separately.

Q. What are the dangers to the forest?

A. Insects kill more trees each year than do fire and disease, and they reduce the growth rate and vigor of more trees than they kill outright. Of course, the trees which they attack are apt to have been already damaged by fire or disease. Weakened trees make good homes for thousands of kinds of insects.

Over the long run, however, disease is the most destructive agent. In its long-range effects, it outranks both insects and fire more than 2 to 1. There are over 100 diseases of economic importance in our forests.

The camp owner can take some solace in the fact that natural stands, the kind of woodland with which he is most apt to be working, are generally less vulnerable to insect and disease damage than are plantations.

Q. How much will the government help to protect the forest?

A. In most states the State Forester, aided by federal funds, maintains a fire protection system. In some states, fire districts are organized in which private forest owners pay part of the cost.

The owner must take independent action to protect his trees from pests. Only a few states provide protection against pests, insects and disease, and then only for major, widespread attacks.

Q. What general preventative measures must be taken in the forest?

A. Careful forest management, which prevents injuries to trees and removes those already sick and weak, helps to avoid insect attack. (Tiny parasites destroy some of the insects. Birds eat many of them, woodpeckers being especially fond of the grubs of bark beetles and borers.)

Extending your road system into isolated areas will provide access for protection crews and for prompt removal of killed timber.

The following fire prevention measures must be observed: Heavy slash left after logging should be pulled away from standing trees. The tops and other useless parts of windfalls and other recently killed timber should be safely disposed of. Weeds, grass, and brush along the edges of fields should be cut before they dry up to become hazards. Flammable trash should be cleaned up. Where forest areas are large, or where small holdings adjoin, the forester may advise plowing fire-breaks to divide the forest into 20 or 30 acre blocks.

Q. Once the forest has been cleaned up, restocked, and protected, what will have to be done to keep it growing and to produce a good crop of trees?

A. Most small forests of mixed age, unless damaged by fire or grazing, reseed themselves. Hardwoods often sprout from stumps. Thus, once started, a forest will probably grow by itself. It will grow faster and bring more profit, however, if the owner helps it along. This means thinning, making improvement cuttings to remove poorer trees so that the better ones may have room to grow. Overmature trees, recognized by their flattened crown, thin foliage and light colored bark, should be taken out. They are no longer growing at a profitable rate. If the crowns of the timber stand look crowded or have dying branches, the forest should be opened up. Enough trees should be cut so that each crown has room to grow one-third or one-half wider than it is. Such a thinning will last until the crowns come together again, perhaps in 5 or 10 years.

The best way to start an improvement cut is to go through the forest with a paint brush and pail (or a paint gun) and mark the trees that are to be felled. Choosing the trees and cutting them at the same time causes too many mistakes. Each tree must be sized up individually for its chances of growing into profitable timber. The owner's goal in managing a forest is to have as many trees as he can of the best quality possible. Foresters can advise the proper spacing for each kind of forest.

Whenever possible, these cuts should be made to pay for themselves. Thinnings in young stands may make firewood, pulpwood, or bean and tobacco poles. Later cutting may yield handle stock, fence posts, and perhaps mine timber, ties, poles, or even sawlogs. But even if thinnings do not always "pay as they go", they will pay for themselves later in cash when the quality trees are harvested.

Q. What common defects make timber less valuable?

A. If an owner can sell logs by grade, he is likely to make more money than if he sells ungraded. An inexperienced timber owner must rely on his local forester for help in grading. Generally speaking, however, grade 1 logs must be free of all serious defects, must meet certain length and diameter specifications, and must saw out a specified amount of clear lumber.

Common defects, lowering the amount or quality of lumber that a log will produce, are: rot, shake, check, pitch ring, cat face, ingrown bark, worm holes, crooks or bends, and forks or crotches. Hardwoods may suffer from mineral streak and blackheart. Spiral grain may be a defect in softwoods intended for high quality lumber.

Logs so full of flaws that it does not pay to have them sawed are called culls.

Q. Is it best to sell one's forest as "stumpage"?

A. When the forest owner does his own cutting instead of selling standing trees (called stumpage), he is said to be marketing converted timber products. Usually he makes up each tree into the product or products that will bring the most profit. Foresters call this "integrated utilization". For example, one tree might yield two high-grade sawlogs from the butt, two or three crossties from the smaller, rougher part of the trunk, and perhaps a length of pulpwood or some firewood from the top. The owner must be able to tell the value of his standing trees and which products they will make. Foresters will help.

Although selling converted products will bring higher prices, there will be more expense involved than in selling the timber to a buyer just as it stands in the woods. A rough calculation may help you to decide. Add to the stumpage value of the timber the cost of harvesting, including the purchase of tools and supplies, the cost of operating the equipment, depreciation, and wages for hired help. Subtract the total from the estimated value of the converted products. The difference is profit and wages.

Q. What about markets?

A. Whether the forest owner sells stumpage or converted products, he usually gains by looking over all likely markets before closing a deal. His local forester will know local prices and markets and may also be able to recommend firms farther away. Very often it will pay to advertise in a local paper, or in a lumber trade journal.

Railroad lines need ties. Along with light, telegraph, telephone and power companies, they also use poles. Railroads and dock, wharf, bridge, and bulkhead contractors in larger towns and cities will quote prices on piling. Brickmakers, bakeries, lime-kilns, packing houses and fuel dealers buy cordwood. Mining companies will give prices and specifications on the timber they need, and so will pulp, veneer, and wood-working plants. Sawmills and lumber yards are always interested. If a wood distillation plant is near, it may buy southern pine, birch, beech, maple or other woods.

It is a good idea to ask for bids by the lump and by measure. Buyers will want to know: location, amount in cords or board feet, size of plot in acres, main kinds of trees in the stand, quality of timber, logging and ground conditions, whether the trees are second growth or old growth, and what the range is in diameter and height.

Generally, a large amount of timber will attract more buyers than a small stand. It may be wise to investigate state or federal cooperatives.

MONEY FROM THE WOODLAND

Q. What will the financial returns be?

A. Returns from investments in woodlands vary considerably, just as they do from any investment where the returns are not guaranteed. Investments in forestry, as in camps, are long term investments. But, like a camp, a developed woodland can be managed so that income is available every year. A well-stocked, uneven aged stand of trees may increase in volume and value from 3 percent to 10 percent annually, depending upon its site, species, and many other factors.

Q. Are there other returns to be gained from good forestry?

A. Yes. Your forest will yield many products needed for your camp, such as posts, firewood, lumber and timbers.

Your forest will be a home for wildlife. Timber clearance attracts deer and other animals that eat tree tops and small branches left on the ground. Opportunities for nature study will be increased.

Your well-managed forest will conserve moisture and prevent erosion.

Your campers will find recreation and learn conservation among clean, straight, sound, thrifty, vigorous, full-crowned, well-located trees.

Q. For which pamphlets should a camp director write in order to get more information on this subject?

A. All inquiries can be directed to the United States Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, Washington, D. C. Ask for "Managing the Small Forest", Farmer's Bulletin No. 1989; "Public Forestry Assistance for Small Woodlands", PA No. 409; "Careers in Forestry", Miscellaneous Publication No. 249; a list of State Foresters; "Forest Regions of the United States", M5154 (10¢); "What We Get from Trees", M5293 (20¢).

Being a descriptive dissertation on

The Various Modes of Camping Out with some curious information about

ETIQUETTE, HATS & FIRKINS

by MARJORY COLLINS

HEIGH-HO for the good old days! Yes, there was camping in the good old days, 1880 to be exact. Of course it was more "camping out" than camping, but the same problems were involved in many cases.

How did they get along then? Let's take a look. In a book written by John M. Gould entitled "How to Camp Out: Hints for Camping and Walking", published by Charles Scribner's Sons, we come across situations that will make even the most harried camp director, faced with the worst mess-hall problem that ever was, be thankful for the ease and comfort of modern camping.

"The hope of camping out that comes over one in early spring," wrote Mr. Gould, "the laying of plans and arranging of details is, I sometimes think, even more enjoyable than the reality itself." If you can extricate yourself long enough from your inventory sheets and application blanks, you might think about that one. But let's not be too hard on Mr. Gould. He did say: "As there is pleasure in this, let me advise you to give a practical turn to your anticipations."

DO-IT-YOURSELF

"How to Camp Out" was quite obviously written before every big department store specialized in goods and services to campers. Do-it-yourself in those days was a necessity rather than a choice. Today you may advise your campers to have name tags sewn on by the store in which clothing is bought. Mr. Gould said: "Have your clothes made or mended as soon as you decide what you will need." And: "As fast as you get your things ready, mark your name on them: mark everything . . . You can easily cut a stencil plate out of an old post card, and mark with a common shoe blacking brush such articles as tents, poles, boxes, firkins (small wooden tubs for lard or butter), barrels, coverings and bags."

MANNERS, MANNERS

To get back to that mess-hall problem . . . are your campers not as quiet and polite as they ought to be? Do their manners at table usually leave something to be desired? Mr. Gould's remark about camp etiquette, when moved from 1880 to the present, may turn out to be the greatest understatement of all time. His comment: "Some things considered essential at the home table have fallen into disuse at camp."

"Eat with your hats on," he goes on, "as it is more comfortable, and the wind is not so apt to blow your stray hairs into the next man's dish . . . If you have no fork, do not mind eating with your knife and fingers. But however much liberty you take, do not be rude, coarse or uncivil; these bad habits grow rapidly in camp if you encourage them."

THE LADY AT CAMP

Here are a few random comments about the fair sex. "Rainy weather is particularly unpleasant to ladies in tents." "Their (ladies') gowns must not reach quite to the ground." "Ladies must be cared for more tenderly than men." We know of at least three little tomboys who would positively shriek with laughter. Ah, but those were the good old days.

Speaking of tomboys, Mr. Gould did not seem to have much confidence in young people in general. That is, he did not think highly of their innate ability to handle matters of campcraft. "Young people," he said, "are apt to put their pot or frying pan on the burning wood, and it soon tips over. Also they let the pot boil over, and presently it unsolders for want of water. Few think to keep the handle so that it can be touched without burning; and hardly any young person knows that pitchy wood will give a bad flavor to anything cooked over it on an open fire. Live coals are rather better, therefore, than the blaze of a new fire."

TOO MUCH BATHING . . .

If your campers (especially the eight to ten year old boys) were to obtain this book, the oldest one on camping in the New York Public Library, they might take admirably to the following advice: "Bathing is not recommended while upon the march, if one is fatigued or has much farther to go. This seems to be good counsel, but I do advise a good scrubbing near the close of the day; and most people will get relief by frequently washing the face, hands, neck, arms, and breast when dusty or heated, although this is one of the things we used to hear cried down in the army as hurtful. It probably is so to some people; if it hurts you, quit it."

CLOTHES FOR THE GENTLEMAN

Sartorially, Mr. Gould recommends being an individualist: "Wear what you please if it be comfortable and durable; do not mind what people say. When you are camping, you have a right to be independent."

But in case you are not quite certain which clothes will best suit you in the role of camp director, or as a leader of overnight hikes, he does have a few suggestions: "If your means allow it, have a suit especially for the summer tour, and sufficiently in fashion to indicate that you are a traveler or camper . . . Loose woolen shirts of dark color and with flowing collars . . . with a number of collars of different styles to button on . . . will probably always be the proper thing. The shirt should reach nearly to the knees to prevent disorders of the stomach and bowels. Avoid gaudiness and too much trimming. Large pockets, one over each breast, are 'handy', but they spoil the fit of the shirt, and are always wet from perspiration."

Wear brogans, Mr. Gould advises, "reaching above the ankles and fastening by laces or buttons as you prefer, but not so tight as to bind the cords of the feet."

"The yachting shirt by custom is worn with hip pantaloons, and often with a belt around the waist; and this tightening appears to do no mischief to the majority of people. Some, however, find it very uncomfortable, and others are especially attacked by pains and indigestion in consequence of having a tight waist."

NEW-FANGLED INVENTIONS

Mr. Gould was apparently not a great believer in technological advances as they pertained to camping. He wrote: "Camp stoves are now a regular article of trade. Many of them are good, and many are worthless. I should try to get the advice of some practical man, and not buy anything with hinged joints or complicated mechanism." And again: "Every year there is put upon the market some patent knapsack, folding stove, cooking utensil or camp trunk and cot combined; and there are always for sale patent knives, forks and spoons all-in-one, drinking cups, folding portfolios and marvels of tools. Let them all alone: carry your own pocket knife. Do not be in a hurry to spend money on new inventions."

But Mr. Gould was not the uncomplicated camper he would have had us believe. In his book, he presented a list of 112 objects essential in any camp, and said that his list was "by no means exhaustive". With no further comment (except to say once more, and for the last time: Ah, those were the good old days!) we herewith append a very brief sampling of those important items:

Ammon'd opodeldoc (camphorated soap liniment), axle grease, pocket barometer, bean pot, beans in bag, beeswax, bible, blacking and brush, brogans (oiled), broom, butter dish and cover, chalk, clothes brush, codline, curry comb, dish towels, drawers, dutch oven, hard-bread, ink (portable bottle), liniment, marline, meal-bag, molasses, money, monkey wrench, mosquito-bar, mustard and pot, night-shirt, oil can, paper collars, salt fish, salt pork, salve, watch and key.

BUYING GUIDE 1962

Dear Camp Director:

Several dividends are yours this year as reader and subscriber:

First . . . you'll find within these pages a roster of over 2,500 firms ready to supply and service your camp. As you thumb through the pages note such hard-to-find items as aquariums, chinese foods, decals, tom-toms, drum lids, inhalators, quoits and sun protectors. You'll find many new supplies and new firms along with the time-proven, camp-recommended ones.

And . . . here's how to convert this Buying Guide into your everyday reference file for 1962. Go through the pages from A to Z. Check or code all the firms who now serve you or firms you will probably need in the near future. Jot down your additional dealer addresses in the margin. From this day on it's no longer hit-or-miss shopping . . . no more scraps of paper to misplace. The Buying Guide becomes your personal memo - a time and money saver.

Moreover . . . we'd like you to accept one more executive aide. In return for a small favor we'll be delighted to send you a valuable gift - a custom-made desk nameplate. Your name (or your camp's) engraved in white Gothic letters on a permanent gray Formica plaque, set into a base of crystal-clear Lucite. Here's how you help: We would like to review your full choice of firms for the next edition . . . companies who service or supply your camp, both those listed in the Guide and those possibly omitted. Write them all in the space provided on the back of this page (or on your own note paper) and mail your list to us. Shortly thereafter you'll receive your desk nameplate.

We also offer our sincere thanks for your help in reinforcing this roster - the best of all camp guides.

Hammond's Exciting New Book

GUIDE TO NATURE HOBBIES

with your purchase of this giant treasury of facts, maps, pictures

Hammond's
NATURE ATLAS OF AMERICA

*Edited by E. L. Jordan, Ph.D.
Rutgers University
256 big 9½x12½" pages*

Here, for you and your campers, is all the intimacy, pageantry, color of nature's wonderworld in the pages of Hammond's Nature Atlas of America. Your curious campers' questions are all answered, your campground becomes an adventureland, your trips to parks and forests are dramatically planned with this book as your guide.

- 320 full-color pictures of your camp neighbors . . . rocks, trees, wildflowers, birds, animals, reptiles, fishes, insects
- 104 full-color range maps show where each of nature's treasured species can be found
- Large-scale colored sectional maps of U.S. and Southern Canada show national parks, forests, wildlife refuges, game preserves . . . and best roads leading to them.

And more, more, more
